

Participation in the RFA

Public participation was central to the development of the RFA. The result reflects the commitment of everyone involved, especially the stakeholder groups, scientists and government officials and many residents in the Central Highlands who contributed their ideas and took part in surveys, meetings and workshops.

The RFA involved more than 12 public meetings throughout the region and in Melbourne as well as intensive community workshops as part of the scientific assessments. As well, numerous written submissions were received on reports and discussion papers.
